Between 11–13 October 2017 I attended the Australian & New Zealand Police Commissioners Forum (ANZPCF) in Queenstown, New Zealand.

The ANZPCF is a nationally established unique forum of all Australian State and Territory Police Commissioners and New Zealand Police, meeting biannually on critical cross-border law enforcement and justice issues.

The strategic intent is to share strategic and practical knowledge and experience and collaborate on innovative advances in policing that can benefit the community.

The October 2017 ANZPCF was chaired by Commissioner Bush of New Zealand Police, and featured extensive discussions on Counter Terrorism. This included a comprehensive presentation supplemented by operational discussions with Commonwealth Counter Terrorism experts.

Other critical law enforcement challenges and innovative strategies discussed were cybercrime, and police staff welfare, including the mental health of police officers.

The ANZPCF continues to play a very valuable role in delivering good value business outcomes to South Australia through innovative knowledge sharing and collaboration, while also providing meaningful opportunities for SAPOL to showcase South Australian initiatives.
