Police Community Constables are part of SA Police and work with police officers. They wear the same uniform as police officers and have 'COMMUNITY CONSTABLE' written on the shoulder of their uniform. They use their knowledge of cultural and social issues to help police.

Protective Security Officers are part of SA Police and work with police officers to help keep the community safe. They guard buildings and patrol places like schools to keep them safe. They are people you can trust and ask for help if you need it. Their uniforms are similar to the police uniform except they have a gold crest and chequer bands, and the words 'PROTECTIVE SECURITY' on their uniform patch, like this.

The SA Police uniform has different hats including a broad-brim hat, a peak cap, the Sikh turban and a baseball cap.

Some police officers, like detectives, wear plain clothes. They carry a metal police badge and SA Police ID card that you can ask to see if you are talking to them.

Some police officers wear a khaki uniform. SA Police officers who wear this uniform usually work in remote country locations. The khaki uniform patch looks like this.

Some police officers wear a bright yellow vest called a hi-vis vest. This helps to keep them safe because it makes it easy for other people to see them, especially at night.

Some police cars have different colours on them but they all have the word 'POLICE' and the police crest on them.
